Preface

The Japan Epilepsy Society was founded with Dr. Akimoto Haruo as the first Chairman and President. It is an interdisciplinary organization with members coming from a range of fields including psychiatry, neurology, pediatrics, neurosurgery and others. Conferences began in 1967, and became accessible to the public since the society's 13th meeting. This year we will hold the 50th Congress of the Japan Epilepsy Society. To mark this occasion, a proposal for this commemorative publication was made to and approved by the Board of Directors, and an editorial committee was established. Secretary General Masako Watanabe is the chief editor, and the editorial board members have made tremendous efforts and worked with meticulous detail through many meetings and email sessions. Many eminent individuals have contributed on important topics, and suggestions have been obtained from the chronological table. I would like to express my sincere appreciation to everyone involved.

In the West, epilepsy has long been associated with demonic possession. Italian painter Raphael depicted an epileptic attack in one part of his painting "Transfiguration." In Japan, epilepsy is known both colloquially as "kutsuchi" and in medical terminology as "tenkan", a term originating from Chinese. However, the Western idea of being possessed by an evil spirit has never really existed in Japan. The logo of the Japan Epilepsy Society ( with a coronal brain section as a motif ) was made by Dr. Juhn A. Wada to express the idea that epilepsy is a "disease of the brain." The International League Against Epilepsy ( ILAE ) has a history spanning a century, during which Masakazu Seino, Yoshiaki Mayanagi, and Tatsuya Tanaka have all served as vice president of the ILAE. This has elevated the presence of the Japan Epilepsy Society in the organization. The ILAE has also presented its Ambassador Award to Toyoji Wada, Masakazu Seino, Haruo Akimoto, Juhn A Wada, Shunsuke Ohtahara, Yukio Fukuyama, and Sunao Kaneko, and its Lifetime Achievement Award to Juhn A. Wada.

Epilepsy research has recently seen dramatic increases in basic and clinical progress, especially since 2000. This includes progress in the concept of the disease itself. An investigation by the ILAE and the International Bureau for Epilepsy( IBE )in 2005 led to a "comprehensive" definition of epilepsy as "a disorder of the brain characterized by an enduring predisposition to generate epileptic seizures and by the neurobiologic, cognitive, psychological, and social consequences of this condition."

This definition incorporates the daily living status of people living with epilepsy. In 2015, the second Monday in February was established as International Epilepsy Day with the aim of uniting the world in facing this disease. The reasoning for this date goes back to the February 14 pilgrimages of people suffering from seizures to a Benedictine monastery( France )that enshrines Saint Valentine, an Italian who is the patron saint of epilepsy. At the 2015 World Health Assembly of the World Health Organization, medical care for people with epilepsy was adopted as the most important issue, and the need was emphasized for the governments of all countries to formulate, strengthen, or introduce policies and laws that promote and protect the rights of people with epilepsy.

Taking this cue, epilepsy community care development projects were started in Japan by eight local governments in coordination with the national government. The medical remuneration points in the health insurance system were also increased for video electroencephalography and other procedures.

With this, health policy and the medical remuneration point system are operating in tandem 10 for the first time with regard to epilepsy.

In recent years, scientifically-based novel anti-epileptics have appeared that are slowly closing the drug lag, and surgical and ketogenic diet therapies are also progressing. However, epilepsy patients and their families still suffer from sudden, unexpected, and violent episodes of seizures in daily life, and the psychological and social burden is greater than for other diseases. Symptoms of epilepsy are diverse, and even though many people have almost no problems in their daily lives, social restrictions from the disclosure of a diagnosis of epilepsy still exist in many cases. Our society strives to advance epilepsy research and treatment, work effectively for patients to ensure not only the protection of their rights, but also increase awareness among the general population to raise their quality of life, and further the prevention of epilepsy. We hope that a time will soon come when the term epilepsy is used comfortably and people with this disease are able to live full and positive lives in society. To be given the role of president of the Japan Epilepsy Society at this fortunate and auspicious time is a great honor, and I would like to conclude by expressing my gratitude.

The 18th Annual Meeting of Infantile Seizure Society

International Symposium on Acute Encephalopathy in Infancy and Its Related Disorders ISAE2016

July 1(Fri) - July 3(Sun), 2016 Tokyo

The International Symposium on Acute Encephalopathy in Infancy and Its Related Disorders (ISAE2016), the 18th annual meeting of infantile seizure society (ISS), was held in Tokyo on July 1-3, 2016. This international symposium was held under the endorsement of International League against Epilepsy (ILAE), Japan Medical Association (JMA), Asian & Oceanian Child Neurology Association (AOCNA), Japanese Epilepsy Society (JES) and Japanese Society of Child Neurology (JSCN). The program comprised 34 comprehensive reviews of recent scientific progress by Professors Solomon L. Moshé, Raman Sankar, Judith Helen Cross, Phillip L. Pearl, and Aristeia S. Galanopoulou as well as other excellent invited experts. Seventy-six excellent papers were presented and discussed fruitfully by 273 attendees from overseas and all over the country. "Educational Program for Leadership Development" was held ahead of the congress. This was an educational program planned for young speakers whose first language is not English, to make a presentation and discussion effectively during the congress of ISAE2016. Professor Solomon L. Moshé, who generously played a part as executive supervisor, proposed this breakthrough program to foster international leaders in the field of pediatric epileptology and child neurology in the future. This inaugural program was an overwhelmingly positive learning experience for all involved. Lastly, we would like to express our sincere appreciation to all invited speakers and attendees from all over the world, who made incredible contributions to the great success of ISAE2016.
